Commerce savs:

The San Francisco correspondent of The Journal of Commerce says:

"During the fortnight, one of our largest grocery jobbing houses, that of Arrington & Co., finding it impossible to meet their forthcoming payments on steamer day, made a temporary sale of all their store effects and business, and sent letters to those of their confidential frietd of whom they had borrowed moneys, stating that they were going into liquidation, and inclosed bank checks for their loans, which were promptly paid. After this, they at once called a meeting of their creditors, to whom they exhibited a full statement of their effects, showing their indebtedness to be $195.000 and their assets $217.000 after first deducting 30 & cent from cost prices for their stock of goods. The senior partner, Wm. Arrington, also made an exhibit of his private estate, showing himself to be worth over $50.000 over and above all his liabilities. Upon this showing, the creditors, without a dissenting voice, very cheerfully granted them the extension they required, without security and free from interest. All the indulgence asked was 30, 60, 90 and 120 days, and this was freely granted. Since then, the Messrs. Arrington have resumed business, and retrieved in a great degree the reputation of Front street."
